

I understand that the FCC is considering a change to allow Low Power FM station to take priority over current FM translator services. I live in Tucson, Arizona, and actively support a 501(c)3 radio broadcasting network, KLOVE, which in Tucson is only heard on a translator. This service provides family-friendly music, news, and community announcements that would not be available if replaced by a LPFM station. There is plenty of spectrum available in Tucson without bumping this valuable translator, and Tucson would be a poorer place without it.

Please do not change the existing rules!

Sincerely,
David Ormand
